

The Good place

The story was about eternal life after death, and people who were classified by their actions and they have been put in two different places named The Good Place, and The Bad Place. The point of this film was that even the people who were in The Good place were not a hundred percent good, and they had some flaws. On the other hand, the people who were in the Bad place were not completely bad. This situation occurs in our daily life to people too. People known as good persons are not completely good, and people known as evil persons are not completely bad.

My favorite character was Eleanor, even though she didn't tell anyone that she is causing all those problems, and she didn't belong to that place. Adding to it, I like her because she was funny, and at least she is honest with his "soulmate." she also tried to be a good person and asked Chidi to teach her so she can earn a place in there. Tahani was my least favorite character because she was trying to show off her accent even though it was unnecessary.

A lot of ironic senses happened during the episode, for example, the time that Chidi expected to see his "soulmate," and he was so happy about that, but after a few seconds he found out that not only Eleanor is not his soulmate, but also she was a big liar in the earth. This kind of irony is known as Situational irony in which the character expects something, but in the situation, everything goes the exact opposite. Another irony that happened in the episode was the time that everything started to get mysterious and scary the Good place, and none of the characters knew what is going on, excluding Chidi and Eleanor. This kind of irony is known as Dramatic irony, in which the audience knows more than the characters about what's happening in the story.

Overall, the first episode was accessible to follow and clear to understand. Also, the movie showed some issues that we have in our society nowadays with making it look like a joke.
