My incase letters

- My "incase letters" are for if I were to ever die suddenly by mistake or on purpose. Like a will but more for the people I love. My letters I think show creative thinking because these aren't normal things a 15 yr old would write. Most people would call them death notes but if I had it like that id be on suicide watch, which I have been. These letters are my personal thoughts and feelings on what I always wanted to say and what I didn't want to say but knew I had to tell the other person. The one behind this is for my mother; not edited as I like it that way. More me, less formal. More the little girl she knows and loves.

This email shows communication between me and my teacher about my grades. My grades slipped as I didn't go to school for some time on account of mental health, so I emailed trying to get my grades up. Communication is very important, if I didn't email him, I could have failed his class. I got a B+ in his class because I emailed and did the extra work to get me from an I to that B.

Spotify playlist

- Although not formally written by me I did have to look up and find and be introduced to these songs, so in some way it theoretically counts. I think this is creative thinking, these songs make me inspired to do what I love. Gets my serotonin and dopamine up and makes me want to wake up and be productive in the morning. They make me want to do the things the songs say, jump, scream, laugh, play, explore. They make me happy and feel like myself which is why I think they're creative thinking.
